CONTRIBUTORS

Dr Richard Allsopp, a native of Guyana, is Director of the Caribbean Lexicography Project and former Reader in English Language and Linguistics, University of the West Indies, Cave Hill, Barbados. He edited the Dictionary of Caribbean English Usage.

Dr Dianne Bardsley is Manager of the New Zealand Dictionary Centre at Victoria University of Wellington. Her PhD involved the compilation and analysis of a rural New Zealand English lexicon from the years 1842–2002. She was contributing editor for the New Zealand Oxford Dictionary and is currently leading several New Zealand lexicography research projects.

James Lambert has worked primarily in Australian English, specialising in slang in general and Australian slang in particular. He was assistant editor of The Macquarie

Dictionary of New Words and general editor of The Macquarie Book of Slang and The Macquarie Slang Dictionary.

John Loftus manages the online archive at www.hiberno-english.com. He was a senior research assistant on A Dictionary of Hiberno-English.

Lewis Poteet is a leading Canadian authority on slang and dialect. He has written extensively about language in Canada's maritime provinces and edited Car & Motorcycle Slang, Hockey Talk, Plane Talk, Car Talk and Cop Talk.

John Williams served as a consulting lexicographer on this project. He has been contributing to general language dictionaries, both monolingual and bilingual, for more than 20 years. He is the author of three children's dictionaries, as well as several articles on the practice of lexicography.

First published in 1937, Eric Partridge's brilliant magnum opus, A Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English, set new standards in the spirited and intelligent appraisal of slang.

In two volumes, The New Partridge Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English takes on the mantle to present a definitive record of the slang of the last sixty years. Containing over 60,000 entries, the dictionary details the slang and unconventional English of the English-speaking world since 1945, with the same thorough, intense and lively scholarship that characterised Partridge's own work.

Editors Tom Dalzell and Terry Victor have worked to continue the Partridge tradition in an evolutionary and accessible way. American and British English slang are given equal prominence and the dictionary also boasts entries from Australia, New Zealand, Canada, India, South Africa, Ireland, the Caribbean and other countries where English is spoken. Entries are given a published source and, where possible, an early or significant example of the term's use in print.

Like its forebear, The New Partridge Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English is a monumental piece of work infused with humour and learning – a prize for anyone with a love of, and a fascination with, language.
