9C, Meeting Room C2.2, November 7, 2019, 1:40 PM - 2:55 PM

In Australia there are approximately 90 Indigenous controlled art centres and the vast majority are located in remote settings. These organisations are very important to the social, cultural and economic well-being of their communities. This symposium will provide an overview of a study that is exploring the ways in which art centres are supporting older artists who may be living with dementia and other conditions associated with ageing. The project is being led by the National Ageing Research Institute and is a collaboration with Mangkaja Arts Resource Agency in Fitzroy crossing, Ikuntji Artists in Haasts Bluff, and Tjanpi Desert Weavers in the NPY Lands. Partners also include Kimberley Aged and Community Services, NPY Women's Council Tjungu Team, the Centre for Remote Health, UWA and RMIT.

In this symposia researchers and representatives from the three participating art centres will share insights from their involvement in this qualitative study. This includes sharing themes that have emerged from over 100 qualitative interviews with artists, staff from the participating art centres and local aged care providers. We will also outline how the methodological approach of participatory action research has provided a rigorous framework to guide the research process and ensured that each stage of the project has been led by the priorities of the art centres. This innovative study speaks to new ways of knowing and enacting strategies that facilitate ageing well in Aboriginal communities. These ways reflect the core business of art centres who operate from a strengths based perspective and enact a model of care that emerges from and maintains the priorities of older Aboriginal people to keep country, family and community central to all decisions and actions. Audience members can expect a creative presentation that reflects the merits of interdisciplinary collaborations and the strengths and generosity of our Elders.
